Everyone knows they feel much better after a good night's sleep, but now scientists have discovered it can help you to live longer too. According to a study in the US, healthy sleeping habits mean men can live almost five years longer, and women for two years. It also found that sleep improves our health and reduces the chance of heart disease.

However, a study shows it's not just about how long you sleep; the q⁷² of your sleep is important too. Dr Frank Qian said sleep must be restful. The researchers said that good sleep for adults depended on five basic factors:

- getting seven to eight hours of sleep each night;
- having trouble falling asleep no more than twice a week;
- having trouble staying asleep no more than twice a week;
- not using m⁷³ to get to sleep;
- waking up feeling rested at least five days a week.

Each factor was given one point with a total of five points. The researchers looked at the results of a survey of 172,321 people in the US that measured their health habits, i⁷⁴ sleep, over five years. They found that people who had all five points were l⁷⁵ to live longer and lead healthier lives than those who had sleep difficulties.

According to The Sleep Charity, a good night's sleep can improve people's memory. Dr Qian admits that no one's sleep is p⁷⁶ – everyone has a late or restless night sometimes. However, he said, “Even from a young age, if people can develop these good habits of getting enough sleep, making sure they are sleeping tight... it can greatly b⁷⁷ their overall long-term health.” The study was based on people reporting their own sleep habits rather than recording them scientifically, so this may have affected the results and more research is needed.

D. Answer the questions (根据对话内容回答下列问题)(12 分)

“You are doing a very important job, Vic,” his mother said. “Your father and I are very proud of you.”

Vic's face went red. “Yeah,” he said. “Thanks, Mom.”

Vic was never much good at talking, and he was particularly bad at talking about himself, but he felt that today was one of the happiest days of his life. He could see how satisfied his parents were and he knew that he was responsible for their happiness. He, too, had waited for this day for a long time.

The North London was poor and dangerous. It had always been poor and dangerous. Every day of his childhood he had come home afraid. Every day he turned the corner of the street and looked for his house. Was it still there? Had there been a fire? Were his parents still alive? He'd always felt that it was his job to make sure that his parents were safe. He had first thought that when he was six years old and he still felt it today. And now, finally, they were going to be safe. They were going to live in the Police Village, the safest district in London. And he had made it possible.

Vic had worked and worked to become a policeman. It had not been easy. All the best schools were for people with money. You had to pay for education and his parents never had enough money to buy him a place at school. So he'd gotten a job as a classroom guard at a private school. Vic watched and listened and learned.

At the age of fourteen, he won a place at a government school. The best students at the school became police officers or soldiers. Vic was one of the best students in the school.

And now he was going to be the best policeman in London. “_____, because _____.” said Vic to himself.

78. What could Vic see on their parents' face?

79. Vic was never good at talking, was he?

80. Where did Vic and his parents use to live?

81. How did Vic feel when he came home every day?

82. How did Vic become a policeman?

83. Please fill in the blanks and tell what Vic said to himself at the end of the story.
