If you need courage when facing a challenge, learn from Jessica Cox. Born in February, 1983, Jessica shocked her parents when they first saw her. Why? She had no arms.

As Jessica grew up, her mother decided that her daughter had the right to live a normal life. She would just have to learn to do things differently.

Jessica's doctor taught her foot exercises, so she figured out how to do everything with her feet. Quite independent at an early age, Jessica learned to tie her shoes, get dressed and take a bath. At 3, she could thread a needle and write her name. She also got artificial arms and used them for 11 years. During that period of time, she was often called names like "Robot Girl" and "Captain Hook", which made her quiet and sad.

But at age 14, she and her family moved to a new city and everything changed. When she was in 8th grade, she decided to accept her difference and removed her artificial arms forever. She says that it is not until we are true to ourselves that we are able to overcome our challenges. Jessica even overcame her greatest fear – flying. And in 2011, she became the world's first armless pilot. She used her feet to fly a light-sport aircraft up to 3,048 meters.

So learn from Jessica Cox – challenges are opportunities.
